"Dr. Moffatt's translation of the Old Testament is entitled to an honored and necessary place in the library of every man who desires to know what the Bible actually says."

a remarkably good novel on its own account and readers are saying so to their friends. The reviewers too, looking for Joyce, found Gorman and are hailing him. Among the reasons why there was a second printing in two weeks, and why a third is on schedule. $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THOMAS HARDY

By Ernest Brennecke Jr.

AN event for which the literary world has been waiting—the first biography of England's foremost novelist-poet; a work which will probably always stand as the most authoritative and comprehensive book upon the subject. Mr. Brennecke records every known fact of Hardy's life, criticizes exhaustively all his major productions and compares them with the plays of the kindred master, Æschylus.

¶ Mr. Brennecke is a member of the English faculty of Columbia University. He is the author of "The Universe of Thomas Hardy" and editor and compiler of "Life and Art, by Thomas Hardy." The present volume represents the supreme achievement in Mr. Brennecke's special field, and as a critical conspectus of a notable literary career can bear comparison with Saintsbury and Taine.

¶ This biography is the result of ten years of research and personal contact.

288 pages. Quarto. Bound in English library buckram, gilt top, deckle-edged.
16 pages of illustrations, including frontispiece portrait of Hardy by Augustus John and six aquatints (in color) of the Hardy country

250th Anniversary of the OXFORD BIBLE

Just 250 years ago the first OXFORD BIBLE was published. Since then the output has grown steadily until the sales now aggregate over 1,000,000 copies annually.

Centuries of endeavor by skilled workmen of successive generations—the constant adherence to the highest ideals in Bible making—have evolved the Oxford standard and resulted in the extensive sales of Bibles bearing the Oxford imprint.

The wide distribution of Oxford Bibles is due not only to their generally conceded high quality but to the loyal cooperation of booksellers everywhere to whom we now extend our hearty thanks.

Plans are under way for specially marking this notable anniversary. Among them is the preparation of suitable window display materials which we shall be glad to furnish the trade upon application. These materials will be prepared not only with the purpose of celebrating the 250th anniversary but also of attracting special attention to your stock of Oxford Bibles.

THE BUSY WOMAN'S COOK BOOK

or Cooking by the Clock

By Mabel Claire

HIS is exactly the kind of cook book that the modern busy woman needs, wants and has heretofore been unable to get—a practical, small and inexpensive book that gives menus and recipes for meals that can be prepared in from 15 to 30 minutes. And nothing out of a can either.

It goes further than any other cook book in its simplicity and explicitness. The author is not only an expert cook herself, but realizes that directions for cooking are worthless unless they tell exactly how things are to be done. Some of the other notable features of this book are:

Every menu is inexpensive.

Every menu has been prepared by the author on a three-burner gas stove with an attached oven and broiler.

This book is so arranged that each menu with its full directions appears on two facing pages which the cook may keep before her while preparing the meal.

Besides the course meals, there are a number of rare recipes for special dishes.

How the burden of dishwashing may be avoided.

A complete list of necessary kitchen equipment.

An ideal kitchen arrangement.

Valuable hints on electric cooking.

An index and time-table of every dish in the book.

Every meal included can be prepared by an absolute beginner.

96 pages. 12mo. Bound in attractive water-proof cover.

Published March 16th.

Price $1.50.

THE MEANING OF DREAMS

By Robert Graves

Author of "The Feather Bed," "Fairies and Fusiliers," "English Poetry," etc.

THE scope of this book can best be gathered from a list of the contents: Past Theories as Far as Freud — Theory of Double Self — Primitive Thought — Varieties of Dreams — Survival of the Past and Other Problems — Value of Dreams on Their Own Account — Practical Benefits of Interpretations — Dreams and Poetry.

Interesting passages deal with the influence of dreams upon Milton in sonnet-composition; on Keats (La Belle Dame Sans Merci) and on Coleridge (Kubla Khan). The limitations of the psychoanalytical method are strictly defined.

The Centenary Translation of the New Testament

By MRS. H. B. MONTGOMERY

The author has rendered a great service to Christian knowledge and devotion, making the four Gospels and the life and words of Jesus a new revelation, particularly to those who have no knowledge of New Testament Greek.

Colloquial Greek is here rendered into colloquial English, yet in a dignified style that does not descend into the commonplace.

The clearness of type and the illuminating headings as well as the phraseology are all helpful in bringing out the truth.

The Door That Has No Key

By BERNARD C. CLAUSEN, D.D.
Sermons for Real Americans

Each chapter is an enlivening breath from the hills, surprising in freshness, full of wholesomeness and vigor. In discussing some real big questions for Christian Americans, the author seeks the channel of honest fairness between the cowardice that would say only pleasant things, and the partisanship which takes those from whom it differs at their worst.

FOURTH EDITION

Just the Book to use with

Bible Crossword Puzzle Books

that are coming out

The frequent revisions of this book assure the reader that he has in it the latest word on the subjects with which it deals. The addition of full-page pictures greatly add to this revision. Dr. Davis claims that they are more than pictures. They instruct. Material gathered by Biblical research during the past decade and a half has been incorporated. It is of convenient size for the minister and Bible student.

"Dr. Davis, who is Professor of Oriental and Old Testament Literature in Princeton Theological Seminary, has produced a work fully abreast of the times and offering the earnest student the best of help in sound, conservative, Biblical scholarship. Pastors, Sunday-school teachers, and all Christian workers can hardly afford to be without this reliable aid to a better understanding and knowledge of Bible facts."—S. S. Times.

William Tyndale

"He has shaped the religious vocabulary of the English-speaking world"
—Edgar J. Goodspeed in "William Tyndale, Martyr."

The Making of the English New Testament

By EDGAR J. GOODSPEED

1925 marks the four-hundredth anniversary of the publication of William Tyndale's epoch-making translation of the New Testament into English. It is fitting, therefore, that at this time there should appear from the pen of Edgar J. Goodspeed, the most recent translator of the New Testament into English, a book about William Tyndale and the long succession of earnest scholars who followed him, seeking to put the New Testament into an appealing English form.

The story in The Making of the English New Testament begins with Tyndale and proceeds through the long succession of translations: Coverdale, Rogers, the King James, the private translations (1700-1900), down to 1923, with the Goodspeed translation. This account of the New Testament's making is a splendid exposition of the translators' efforts through the years to accomplish what Tyndale sought when he said that he "perceived by experience how it was impossible to stablysh the laye people in any truth excepte the Scripture were playnly layde before their eyes in their mother tonge."

How the unearthing and interpretation of textual materials (the papyrus discoveries), which have made modern translations possible and necessary, have brought us nearer and nearer to the original gospels is a most fascinating story in the history of scholarship. All readers of the American Translation, as well as of other modern versions, will want this new book by Dr. Goodspeed.

- II. The English Bible Authorized.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP AMONG THE NATIONS By Professor Jerome Davis of Yale Divinity School and Reverend Roy B. Chamberlin, Minister of Church of Christ, Hanover, New Hampshire.

A study course on International Relations, which bravely faces controversial questions and evades no issue of fundamental importance. "The method by which the course is organized is unusual. Each lesson is introduced by actual incidents which have happened and which, primarily because they are true happenings and are cleverly arranged so as to bring out the different principles on which the discussion of each lesson is to be based are much more appealing and thought provoking than any statement of abstract principles could possibly be. . . . It is good to see a pamphlet issued for study of the international implications of Jesus' principles and spirit, which neither evades crucial issues nor presents its material in a one-sided manner."—The World Tomorrow. Mothers and teachers of little children, as well as the children themselves, will find this book a delight."—The Expositor.

Completely revised and printed from new type

Modern English translations of the New Testament have been criticized as too colloquial and undignified, or else as too harshly literal. Dr. Weymouth's famous version avoids these pitfalls. PATRIOTISM IS NOT ENOUGH

By Dr. John Haynes Holmes

IN a temperate, well-reasoned manner Dr. Holmes points out the differences between loyalty, nationalism and patriotism, indicates the factors which served to ennoble or to stultify each sentiment and shows how the clash of codes tended to bring on the World War.

“I cannot hope,” says the author in his preface, “as I do not expect, that this book will bring comfort to any readers of the familiar ‘one-hundred-percent’ variety, but I shall be disappointed if it does not win the assent of those who comprise what Romain Rolland so finely describes as ‘the brotherhood of the free spirits of the world’.”

The book represents the fruits of profound learning, wide vision and high aspiration. An invaluable document and source book alike to the idealist and the dispassionate seeker after the facts of history.

IN this year of grace, 1925, we are in the midst of an era of Biblical translation. Students of the New Testament, as Weymouth and Moffatt in England, Ballantine and Goodspeed in America, have in recent years issued their personal translations; and now, new translations of the Old Testament are also being made. Leading publishers are lending their support, printing and binding the volumes according to approved current usage for books of general literature. We may sometimes question the judgment or taste of a new translation and sometimes a commonplaceness of English phrasing, but competency of scholarship and sincerity of purpose are usually beyond dispute. Popular interest is testified by newspaper, serial publication and radio broadcasting of a translation made by a scholar who anticipated interest of a small circle of readers.

Conditions recall the straining interest of 1881, when the entire text of the British Revised New Testament was sent by cable to the Chicago Tribune. At that time, however, two hundred and seventy years had elapsed since any widely noticed, new, English translation of the Bible had appeared. The more recent interest is notable from the fact that any new translation of today is but one of many produced within the past forty-four years.

Behind each era of translation lies some great advance in Biblical science that makes it possible to get nearer to the words and intent of the original writers. With each such advance, scholars are irresistibly impelled to give the fruits of the new knowledge to the people. Even since the publication of the American Standard Version in 1901 and the British Revision in 1881 (New Testament), 1884 (Old Testament), the papyri from the sands of Egypt have made our knowledge of the New Testament language available twenty-five years ago obsolete at many points. Back of the great British and American revisions of our era lay an advance in textual criticism that eliminated from the Greek of the New Testament, as used by the revisers of 1611, the errors of five or six centuries of hand copying; and there lay also the development of the modern science of comparative philology that made possible a new comprehension of the Old Testament Hebrew and Aramaic.

When and with what consummation the present era of translation, which produced its first great fruitage forty-four years ago, will reach its climax, it is idle to speculate. It may be as long continued as that which extended from 1525 to 1611; I had almost added as significant also, but one dares not propose such comparisons. This year of 1925 marks the four hundredth anniversary of the opening of that earlier era, the tercentenary of whose completion we celebrated only fourteen years ago.

Prior to the year 1525 there were only manuscript copies of the English Bible, altho almost seventy years had passed since the publication of the first printed Latin Bible, and printed translations of the Scriptures in Spanish, Italian, French, Dutch, German, and Bohemian had been published a full generation before. Yet conditions in England had not permitted a printed Bible in popular language.

The Wycliffe Testaments

It was now almost a century and a half since the first translation of the entire New Testament in English had been issued. That version had been made, not directly from the Greek, but from corrupt, fourteenth century text of the Latin Vulgate, which had undergone the vicissitudes of ten centuries of hand copying since Jerome had revised the Old Latin and produced the version which ultimately became the Vulgate. This so-called Wycliffe New Testament of 1380 and the Old Testament of 1384 had been revised by Purvey in 1388 and proscribed, twenty years later, by a convocation of the province of Canterbury, which decreed that no man should by his own authority translate any text of the Scripture into English or any other tongue, and that no man should read any such upon pain of greater excommunication and punishment as a favorer of heresy and error. A little later a more stringent act was passed against heresy, and the followers of Wycliffe, the English Lollards, sometimes called "Bible men," were destroyed as a party. Their Bibles, however, survived in numbers, being copied and circulated for private use, despite the authorities. Later revisions had not been undertaken, and the language of the translation had grown obsolete.

Tyndale's Early Training

In the meantime, Constantinople had fallen, Greek scholars had been scattered to the west, and England had not been backward in welcoming the new-old learning. Erasmus himself had taught at Cambridge for a time, and in 1516 had published his Greek text of the New Testament with a Latin translation. William Tyndale, trained at Oxford and Cambridge, became a competent student of the Greek, imbued with the purpose of making a Biblical translation based upon the original language.

Back of the great English translation era which Tyndale's work introduces lies, then, the possibility of success to the Greek Testament, undreamed of in Wycliffe's time. The same wonderful era of advance that followed the fall of Constantinople and the invention of printing had seen the publication of the Old Testament in the original Hebrew and Aramaic, tho very few except Jews could read it. Tyndale's own knowledge of Hebrew was to be acquired under the instruction of Continental rabbis after he had fled England forever. The staunch defenders of the ecclesiastical and political order soon realized the danger in the advancing knowledge of Greek and Hebrew. Passionate denunciations of these languages have been noted as indicative of the progress their study was making.

After his university training, Tyndale spent two years as tutor in a nobleman's family; here he came into hot debate with the local clergy and is said to have made his oft-quoted declaration that, if God spared his life, ere many years he would cause a boy that driveth a plow to know more of the Scriptures than the prelate. When his presence had become a source of danger to his patron, he removed to London, filled with the purpose of translating the New Testament so that the laity might know its truth. He hoped to find an opportunity to live and carry forward his work in the great establishment of Bishop Tunstall, of whose love of scholarship Erasmus had spoken highly. With commendation from his patron to the Comptroller of the King's Household and a translation of an oration of Isocrates as proof of his competency, he sought the Bishop's support. Despite such excellent credentials, he was advised to seek service elsewhere in London.

Finding shelter and support in the home of a worthy alderman, he devoted himself day and night to his great task and, at the same time, made shrewd observation of oure prelates * * * and sawe things wherof I deferre to speake at this tyme, and understode at the laste not only that there was no rowme in my lorde of londons palace to translate the new testament, but also that there was no place to do it in all englonde, as experience doth now openly declare."

So Tyndale betook himself to the Continent, spending the year 1524 in Ham-burgh, and then going to Cologne where he was able to begin the printing of a quarto edition of his New Testament, probably thru some connection with the printing house of Peter Quentel, founded some fifty years earlier. Before the printing was finished, that relentless enemy of the Reformation, Cochlaeus, got an intimation of it, and, thru entertaining the printers at his inn and getting them under the influence of wine, learned where the work was being done. With the precious sheets already printed, Tyndale fled up the Rhine to Worms, where Luther had made his celebrated speech at the Diet some four years before. Here, where many had adopted the Lutheran faith, conditions were more favorable for carrying out the printing of the New Testament. According to Cochlaeus, a quarto edition was published here, but whether this embodied the sheets printed at Cologne, or was entirely reset, is not known, as no copy has survived. A single copy of eight of the ten quires printed at Cologne is preserved in the British Museum. Two examples of the first octavo edition are extant, one in Bristol and the other in London. From types and illustrations these are identified as printed at the press in Worms of Peter Schoeffer, the second son of that Peter Schoeffer "who had helped to make the art of printing a success at Mainz some seventy years before."

Henry VIII is Warned

Henry VIII received warning of the deadly danger that threatened his kingdom in a letter from Edward Lee, afterward Archbishop of York. He wrote of the certain news he had obtained in the country where he was traveling that an Englishman had translated the New Testament and was soon to arrive in England "with the same emprinted." He went on to remind the monarch that: "All our forfaders gouernors of the chirche of England hathe with all diligence forbed & exhued publicacion of englishe bibles, as appereth in constitutions prouincal of the chirche of Englund."

The state of Biblical knowledge among those for whom Tyndale had prepared his translation may be gathered from the prologue to the first edition wherein he states:

"I supposed yt very necessary to put you in remembrance of certayne poyntes, which are: that ye well vnderstand what these wordes meane. The olde testament. The newe testament. The lawe. The gospell. Moses. Christ. Nature. Grace. Workinge and belevynge. Dedes and faythe." He then proceeds to define these several terms in a very elementary way. No doubt he knew full well the need of such definitions. Erasmus had found the apocryphal gospel of Nicodemus chained to a pillar for reading in the nave of Canterbury Cathedral, but no Bible there. Even a quarter century after Tyndale's publication, it is reported that the Bishop of Gloucester found more than one half of his clergy unable to say the ten commandments, while many did not even know where they were to be found in the Bible.

How the Circulation of the Bible Was Stopped

Despite the opposition of King and Church, the printed New Testament found its way to England where it was secretly sold and distributed. We have reports of copies selling in 1527 at prices which, estimated in the purchasing power of shillings today, would perhaps be equivalent to thirty and forty shillings. Copies were soon found in London, Oxford, and many other cities. The famine that broke out in 1527 is thought to have facilitated the importation, for, with the wheat that had to be brought in, it is said there went hundreds of copies of the Testament. A letter from the Bishop of Norwich, dated in 1527, is extant in which the writer approves the course of the Archbishop of Canterbury in trying to stop the circulation by buying up the first, or a very early, edition and levying the charge on the bishops. In 1526, Tunstall, in whose house Tyndale had thought, three years before, to find opportunity to make his translation, sent out a prohibition in which he called the new books "pestiferous and most pernicious poison," accused the author of seducing the simple people by wicked and perverse interpretations.

The gloom of all the sad story of obscurantist opposition is somewhat relieved by the humor of the account in Halle's Chronicle (1548) of the attempt to prevent circulation by purchase: "Here is to be remembered, that at this present tyme, Willyam Tyndale had newly translated and imprinted the Newe Testament in Englishe, and the Bishop of London, not pleased with the translation thereof, debated with hymself, how he might compasse and deuise, to destroye that false and erroneous translacion (as he saied)" The account goes on to tell how one Augustine Packyngton, a "Merchant of London of a great honestie, the same tyme was in Antwerp, where the Bishope then was" and how Packyngton who highly favored William Tyndale, "but to the bishop utterly showed hymself to the contrary" arranged to buy up all copies of the New Testament on sale there. The Bishop "saied, gentle Master Packyngton, do your diligence and get them and with all my harte I will paie for them, whatsoeuer thei cost you, for the bokes are erroneous and naughtes and I entende surely to destroy them all, and to burne them at Paules Crosse. Augustine Packyngton came to Willyam Tyndale and saied, Willyam I knowe thou arte a poore man, and hast a hope of Newe Testamentes, and bokes by thee, for the whiche thou hast bothe indaungered thy frendes, and beggered thy self, and I haue now gotten thee a Merchaunt, whiche with ready money shall dispatche thee of all that thou hast, if thou thynke it so profitable for your self. Who is the Merchant said Tyndale? The bishope of London, saied Packyngton, O that is because he will burne them saied Tyndale, ye Mary quod Packyngton, I am the gladder saied Tyndale for these two benefites shall come therof, I shall get money of hym for these bokes, to bryng myself out of debt (and the whole world shall crie out vpon the burnynge of Goddes worde.) And the ouerplus of the money, that shall remain to me, shall make me more studious, to correct the said Newe Testament, and so newly to Imprint the same once again, and I trust the second will muche better like you, than euer did the first: And so forward went the bargain, the bishop had the bokes, Packyngton had the thankes, and Tyndale had the money. Afterward when mo newe Testaments were Imprinted, thei came thick and threfolde into Eng-lande." Shortly thereafter, one George Constantine, brought before the "lorde Chauncelor," Sir Thomas More, on suspicion of heresy, was promised immunity if he would tell who was supplying funds to Tyndale. "My lorde quod Constantine, will you that I shal tell you the truthe? Yea I praie thee quod my Lorde. Mary I will quod Constantine, truly quod he it is the Bishope of London that hath holpen vs, for he hath bestowed among vs, a greate deale of money in New Testamentes to burne them, and that hath and yet is our onely succoure and comfort, Now by my trothe quod More, I thynke euen the same, and I saied so muche to the bishop, when he went about tu bye them."

Six years after the completion of the first edition of his New Testament, Tyndale, who had now acquired sufficient knowledge of Hebrew, completed his translation of the Pentateuch and, before his death, was able to add a translation of the book of Jonah and personally to revise his New Testament.

There has been debate over the question whether the authorities in England ob-

The Federal Council Honors Tyndale

WHEREAS: The year 1925 marks the four-hundredth anniversary of the first printing of the New Testament in English, thus beginning thru the scholarship and heroism of William Tyndale the ever broadening effort for popular distribution of the Holy Scriptures.

RESOLVED that the Federal Council of Churches urge its members to observe the four-hundredth anniversary and suggest that William Tyndale's life, the translation of the Bible from the original tongues, and the world-wide distribution of the Holy Scriptures thru the printing press, be used for discussion in the pulpit, the Sunday school, and the religious press thru 1925, and authorizing the Administrative Committee to prepare suitable literature for such an observance.

jected to the translation of the Scriptures per se or only to the annotations and prologues which were included in one edition and another. The point is not very vital, since the translation itself contained features that could but give offence to ecclesiastical authorities. Sir Thomas More in a "dyaloge" published in 1529, singled out three words of "gret weyght" and frequent occurrence which he maintained were "mystranslated." One was "prestys," the other "chyrch," and the third "charyte"; the one Tyndale made "seniour" (elder), the other "congregation," and the third "love." To More the first two changes seemed an attack upon the Catholic Church and its holy orders, the third designed to bring contempt on good works in the interest of Luther's heresy "that all our saluacion standeth in fayth alone." Later versions have restored "church" in passages where Tyndale used "congregation" to translate the Greek ecclesia, which in Classical usage meant an assembly; but have followed Tyndale in recognizing that the New Testament does not use the term "priest" to designate a Christian officer. They have varied between following the Vulgate charitas and translating the Greek agapé by the English "love"; the King James version uses "charity"; the Revisers prefer the translation "love." In fact, no one English word can perfectly translate the word which the New Testament writers selected from the variety of Greek nouns expressing different types of love, to represent their conception of Christian love.

The marvelous translation of Tyndale bore its finest literary fruit eighty-six years after its first printing, in the Authorized or King James Version of 1611. The complete English Bible of Myles Coverdale, embodying Tyndale's New Testament and those Old Testament books which he had translated, appeared in 1535, the year before Tyndale's martyrdom. "Matthew's Bible" of 1537 was really Tyndale and Coverdale, rather than a new translation as it professed to be. "Taverner's Bible" of 1539 was but a revision of "Matthew." So the publication went on with the "Great Bible" of the same year, the "Geneva Bible" of 1560, and the "Bishops' Bible" of 1568. Official co-operation gradually took the place of private enterprise with official opposition, until the Bishops' Bible revised became the Authorized Version of 1611, still preferred, from custom and from the incomparable beauty of its English, by the great majority of English speaking Protestants.

In the mean time, the Romanist party found it essential to make an English version of the Vulgate, the New Testament appearing in 1582, the Old only about a year before the King James Version. The strongly Latinized vocabulary of this translation influenced, it is felt, the Authorized Version of 1611, which nevertheless owes its fundamental traits chiefly to Tyndale who translated directly from the original languages, while all the official Protestant versions since issued have been simply revisions of revisions of the work of William Tyndale.

It is interesting to note that in other instances than in the debate between "charity" and "love," where the King James revisers departed from Tyndale, the revisers of 1881 sometimes returned to his translations. Together these noble companies of scholars, the one seeking for variety and beauty of diction, the other aiming primarily at accuracy and perfect fidelity to the original text, bear united testimony to the incomparable gifts of the heroic translator and publisher of four centuries ago.

Canadian Book Promotion

THE Canadian book-trade has just organized the Association of Canadian Bookmen, which will establish an office and employ a permanent secretary, supported by a fund of $5,000 to be supplied pro rata by the Canadian publishers.

This group will begin an energetic campaign to stimulate the general use and interest in books thruout Canada along plans similar to those that have been tested out in the United States, but adapted carefully to the facts and conditions of the Canadian situation. S. B. Watson, chairman of the Publishers' Section of the Toronto Board of Trade, which is virtually the Canadian Publishers' Association, has been chairman of the committee that has forwarded this movement. The publicity in behalf of books is gradually taking hold in all English speaking countries.

Busy Presses Feed Distant Fields

The Printed Word Assumes Increased Importance in Asia and Africa

By Harlan P. Beach, F.R.G.S.

Librarian of Day Missions Library

THROUGHOUT the southern two-thirds of the African Continent, Negro Africa, no literature existed until the coming of the Roman Catholic and Protestant missionaries; and on the Mediterranean and northeastern littoral, it existed in very limited quantities. It has been a missionary objective, in sections without a written language, to reduce it to writing and then to prepare vernacular versions of the Scripture, in whole or in part, catechisms, hymnbooks and minor Christian literature. On the northern fringe, the new literature provided for the relatively few literates has been supplementary to what already exists, with an emphasis upon distinctively Christian books and others used in schools, which they have always established.

While there has been literacy for centuries or milleniums in China and India, the difficulty of mastering several thousands of characters in China, if one would read fluently, and, in India, the discouragement to reading of poverty and the Brahman rules among men of lower castes and all women, are still obstacles to any extended use of the printed page in those lands. With the large increase of missionary work in these countries, especially because of the growing emphasis of education in the missionary propaganda, as well as the liberal "grants-in-aid" for schools by European governments—particularly in India and until recently in Egypt—the use of literature of all kinds has become far more general than it was two decades ago.

Of the special agencies engaged in the literary propaganda, the most prominent of all are the Bible societies, the British and Foreign of London being the foremost by far, with a record of 558 languages or dialects in which it has published or circulated the Bible as a whole or in part. The American Bible Society of New York, with versions in 176 languages to its credit, stands second in the list of agencies providing printed translations of the Scriptures for the nations. Scarcely less important are the great Tract societies, working afield thru a much larger number of branch or assisted societies. The two foremost of these are the Religious Tract Society of London, and the American Tract Society of New York; tho the pioneer organization, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, now in its 227th year, has provided books in many languages, especially for Anglican workers. Scarcely a mission land has been without grants in money and in books in the vernaculars for religious and educational purposes from the two societies first named.

Since 1858, when the Christian Vernacular Education Society—now the Christian Literature Society for India and Africa—was established to counteract the ignorance and misunderstanding of the aims and principles of the British Government, which had resulted in the terrible Sepoy Mutiny of the preceeding year, this organization and its imitators, the Christian Literature Societies for China and Japan, have been very important factors, both in the production and in the distribution of vernacular literature in those countries. The remaking of China owes much to its Literature Society and to Timothy Richard, its most eminent secretary and, in many ways, China's greatest literateur. The Indian Society, thru its many branches located in the different language areas of that empire, has done more than any other agency in producing and distributing a varied literature. Its overflow into Persia and Syria, and since 1923 into Africa, evidences its wide influence. All three of these main societies unite, in one common producing body, the best literary talent of their respective countries; while the international character of the organizations aids in a wider distribution of the resulting product. The Nile Mission Press of Cairo serves a similar purpose, in Egypt and Syria primarily, but also for the entire Mohammedan world, which receives its Arabic publications and translates them into vernacular languages.

During the last quarter of a century, because of the rapid evolution in mission lands, with Japan in the lead, there has been a growing demand for literature produced by nationals, instead of by the missionaries. Heretofore they have been the main translators, aided by indigenous scholars, with little initiative or production granted them. The Association Press of China was the pioneer in recognizing and meeting this demand; and today that country is doing the most to meet the national requirements in Christian literature production. Japanese Christians from the outset had been pioneers in journalism, and later they have produced some of the "best sellers" in the realm of current literature. The Apostle of Kobe slums and great Christian labor leader of the Empire, Toyohiko Kagawa, is a notable writer of this class, as his "Crossing the Death-line" reached its 300th edition within two years, tho the book is deeply religious and outspokenly Christian. India's Christian leaders are likewise calling for an indigenous authorship to supplement and eventually supplant the product of foreign exotics; and in this demand other emerging nations increasingly unite.

Globe travelers who penetrate into the interior are surprised to find so many presses engaged in pouring forth a great volume of Christian literature. No statistics are available, but in China there were twenty-six mission presses in 1920,* with the Presbyterian Press at Shanghai, established in 1844, in the van. In 1921, its output was 2,066,285 copies of Chinese works and 196,222 in English or else bilingual. Tho sold at near cost, the net profit was about 8 per cent. While most of the publications were religious, the extended list includes a large number of works intended for national and educational uplift. Even in secluded African villages, we have seen little offices where hand-presses were turning out in the aggregate an almost unbelievable amount of literature. Its character and linguistic variety are bewildering, as the 135-page Bibliography of African Christian Literature, 1923, shows.

Tho speaking of presses under missionary auspices, we must not omit to mention three others very prominent in Asia. The most extensive on that continent is the Commercial Press of Shanghai, owned by non-Christians but boasting that it has never printed an anti-Christian line. It compares favorably in size and operation with the best in America, and turns out some 70 per cent of China's school and college text-books, as well as an enormous amount of Christian literature, particularly in the new National Script. The Chung Hwa Book Company of the same city is likewise a producer of Christian books that are widely read. In Japan the Fukuin Press of Yokohama was, before the earthquake and fire, the printers of most of the Christian literature used in that empire, being one of the best presses in all Asia.

A unique agency for getting such literature read is the "Newspaper Evangelism" scheme, first used in Japan and now also in China. It purchases space in daily periodicals, paying for it as for advertising matter. Articles upon Christian themes and other related material are inserted here, with the addition of the director's name and address and an invitation to correspond with him. In China the Christian Literature Society is following the same plan, but space is not there paid for. Tho the oldest newspaper in the world, the Peking Gazette, traditionally dating from our tenth century, is a Chinese production, dailies and magazines of the new order are a novelty and most of them are very amateurishly edited. To aid these embryonic editors, the society translated and gave to the editors copies of a well-known book upon journalism, with the result that contributions from the society were gladly received and are printed in various provinces of the Republic every day of the year.

Lacking statistics of production and reports of reading for different years, we cannot estimate the extent or rate of increase of the growing use of literature as a missionary agency thruout these two continents. Yet the necessity of visiting mission fields for an aggregate of three and a half years since 1904 in order to study conditions and racial problems makes the present writer certain that the use of the printed page in Asiatic and African lands is advancing by leaps and bounds, except where objection to Occidentalizing influences are temporarily dominant. As a forecast, China is the greatest field of future letters—the greatest arena for literary progress and conflicts. If the newly invented National Script, with its so-called 39 letters, which can be memorized in a few hours or days, gains the ascendancy over the age-old characters requiring years for their mastery, then literacy in that country will speedily extend, with a marvelous increase of readers. Perhaps the system of Mr. Yen, just being exploited, whereby a thousand of the most commonly used characters are intensively taught, overcomes the reluctance of those who do not approve of anything like an unchangeable alphabet for a monosyllabic language, a surer group of readers may be expected, and literature will be read with the understanding, as is not always true in the case of the National Script. And if the nearly 100 per cent of literacy among children of school-going age, achieved in Japan, is realized in other lands of these two continents, the use of a tremendous volume of literature is assured. This, however, will depend also upon how fully Western ideas and information become naturalized, and upon how well the new journalists and authors are prepared for their tasks. If the example of two of China's Christian universities, which have established departments of journalism and authorship, is widely followed in other lands, the era of unparalleled reading of literature of Christian and Occidental character will speedily dawn.

* Riteon's Christian Literature in the Mission Fields says there were 30 in 1915.

The Perennial Best Seller

NOT a book, but a library; yet the Bible, voluminous as it is, finds a distribution that completely overtops all other "best sellers." It has been estimated that 80,000 copies are given circulation every day of the year, yet this flow has never caught up with the demand for the Scriptures, as is every year demonstrated.

In America alone two million children come each year to reading age and most of these will be presented with a Bible or New Testament, either in the home or at their church. This first Bible is likely to be replaced later by a better volume or by one with more notes, more maps or more satisfactory binding. This, again, will be supplemented by other editions and translations as study of the book and appreciation of its wisdom broadens and deepens.

It seems a long way back to the days of the chained Bibles, when one volume in Latin had to serve a whole town, a town which today might marshal, from its home book-shelves, an army of fifty thousand Bibles.

And the greatest single name in the history of the distribution of the Scriptures from the chained Bibles to the 30,000,000 a year is that of William Tyndale whose first printing of the New Testament came from a German press, four hundred years ago. His work gave real impulse to the idea that the Bible could belong to all the people; his translation was for the nations that have had a special zeal for Scripture distribution; his poetic diction has flavored, as has no other book, the literature of four centuries. Few men have left so permanent a memorial. It is most appropriate that the nations should do him reverence at this time.

Easter Falls on April 12th

THE next six weeks are the busiest of the year in the bookstore's department for Bibles devotional and general religious literature.

Books and Missions

HARLAN P. BEACH, librarian of the Day Missions Library, Yale University, has, at the request of the Publishers' Weekly, written the article on the growing use of books in missionary work which appears in this week's issue. Mr. Beach points out that not only has there been a great increase in the money and literature sent out to India and China, but the presses under missionary auspices have increased in number and in variety and volume of output, intended for national and educational service. There is also a constantly growing demand for the work of native authors to supplement and eventually supplant the work of foreign authors. Mr. Beach describes a market for books about which most of us are very hazy.

Encouraging the Use of Books

"A RELIGIOUS book is one which points the way to the highest goals of life," says the pamphlet just issued by the National Association of Book Publishers, a pamphlet which describes for the bookseller various ways in which he may encourage the use of religious books. In the church, church bulletins, book sermons, the church library, literary vespers, announcements from the pulpits and in the Sunday school, carry book news to the congregation. Church clubs may have talks on the Life of Tyndale. The libraries may arrange exhibits of religious books during Lent. And in the bookstore Bibles, devotional books, and other religious books can be specially featured during March and April.

Good Mother Goose

THE debate is again on, between "Mother Goose" and anti-Mother Goose. The radio has broadcast a debate on the subject, and the newspapers, especially in their correspondents' columns, have continued the discussion. If anything, the anti-Mother Goose party has been the more extensively heard from. Cruelty should be eliminated they say:

"Three gay mice see how they run

"They all ran after the farmer's wife

"Who gave them more cheese than they'd had all their life . . .

Another bad situation exists in:

Tell-tale, tit,

Your tongue shall be slit,

And every little dog in Town

Shall have a little bit.

but it admitted that this poem is beyond hope of constructive censorship and should be dropped from the collections.

There is room for considerable difference of opinion as to whether "Hey, diddle, diddle!" can be saved. Certainly the dog should not have laughed at the cow's impulsive action and the imaginative child will shudder to think of the cow's broken legs.

Several good revisions of "Ding Dong Bell" have been proposed which agree in eliminating all publicity for Johnny Green, and accentuating the praise accorded to pussy's rescuer. Another old favorite that no one seems to wish to eliminate all together in spite of its cruelties is "The Old Woman in the Shoe."

"There was a good woman

Who lived on a farm

She'd a fine lot of children

And kept them from harm

She gave them all whole-wheat

Instead of plain bread

And kissed them all gently

And tucked them in bed."

The suggested changes have not been wholly from the point of view of eliminating cruelties. A question of economics and class pride is raised by "Margery Daw." Here is the story of a child who is to have but a penny a day because she can't work any faster. Certainly this is but continuing into the minds of 20th century children, 18th century ideas of the value of labor.

Publishers Go to Albany

THE much debated "clean books" bill of Justice Ford was given a hearing before the legislative committee at Albany of February 24th, and a large delegation of publishers, members of the National Association of Book Publishers, attended and gave backing to the opinions expressed by their association's counsel, Eustace Seligman of the firm of Sullivan & Cromwell.

The special committees of the publishers who have studied the proposals which are embodied in the new bill were unanimously of the opinion that it would create an unwarrantable control over book publishing and that there is no sound ground of public interest to recommend the revisions proposed.

The brief of counsel stated "that the National Association of Book Publishers is opposed to the publication of obscene literature, but it is also opposed to the proposed bill." It said, furthermore, "that the proposed bill constitutes an attempt to override the decisions of the courts of the State of New York defining what is obscene literature."

That the proposed bill seeks an amendment of the Penal Law "in order to override the decisions of the courts of New York which have wisely held that in determining whether or not a book is obscene, it is not proper to consider isolated passages only, but the book must be looked at as a whole." That the bill proposed to change the legal status of an indictment for obscenity so that the reviewing courts would have no power to consider matters of fact. These would be deemed to have been settled by the first jury.

That the elimination of testimony is against present tendencies in interpreting the rules of evidence and that "especially with reference to the subject of obscene literature it would seem entirely proper to accept the opinions of experts." Also this elimination of testimony raises the question of the constitutionality of the law as has been pointed out by a Committee on the Amendment of the Law of the Bar Association of New York City.

That "the Federal Statutes supplement the New York law and render any change in the latter unnecessary."

Publishers Go to Albany

National Association Opposes Censorship Plan

THERE is nothing more difficult to discuss with clarity than censorship legislation and nothing more difficult to understand clearly than the motives and purposes of those who enter into such discussions. On the occasion of a clash such as that which has been brought about by the introduction of the so-called "Clean Books Bill" at Albany, the chances are great that there will be misunderstandings and wrong interpretations put upon the statements and actions of both proponents and opponents.

It must have been clear, however, to the legislators that a delegation such as went up last Tuesday to Albany from the National Association of Book Publishers would not have appeared there in such force and with such adequate representation unless it felt seriously that the proposals made were a real menace to publishing and bookselling, and it seems certain that such an impression was made and should have great weight in the discussions of the legislative committee. A group of twenty publishers took an early train from New York and were in the Senate Chamber when the hearing opened. The plan had been arranged by J. W. Hiltman, chairman of the Association's Legislative Committee, and by Arthur Scribner, chairman of the Committee on Ethical Problems. Among other houses represented by some member of the firm were Harper & Brothers, G. P. Putnam's Sons, The Macmillan Company, A. A. Knopf, Inc., The Century Company, Grosset & Dunlap, Oxford University Press, A. L. Burt & Company, George H. Doran & Company, Simon & Schuster, J. B. Lippincott & Company, R. R. Bowker Company, E. P. Dutton & Company, Harcourt, Brace & Company, and Henry Holt & Company.

The arguments of the publishers against the proposed new clauses in the statute were presented by Eustace Seligman of Sullivan & Cromwell, attorneys, and Major George Haven Putnam. Other publishing interests, chiefly magazine publishers, were represented by William A. De Ford of New York City. The Authors' League of America, altho not represented, sent word that it was in sympathy with the analysis of the situation as presented by the book publishers. Chairman Baumes of Orange County had arranged for the use of the Senate Chamber on account of the great interest in the subject, and this gave a very impressive setting for the whole discussion. In the big upholstered seats of the senate semi-circle sat book and periodical publishers and other interested people, and the two high balconies were used by interested spectators brought largely by curiosity as to the subject discussed. Reporters in great number were present, and in the center of this august auditorium sat the representatives of the Senate and Assembly.

One of the most dramatic, and, in some ways, the most telling situations that developed followed the reading by Senator Love from a volume that he had brought to the hearing to indicate the character of the problem involved. The newspapers had mentioned the fact that such reading was to take place, to which publicity Senator Love was averse, and he paused (needlessly), to give anyone a chance to leave the room who was not interested in the excerpts. Each book was wrapped in a paper, so that its title could not be told. Then followed the reading of a page from the unknown work. The impression created was so decidedly hostile to the book read from that the Senator read no more but rested his case on that. The impression would have been stronger, however, if a moment later an Assemblyman had not asked of the lawyer representing Justice Ford whether the book read from was not one that had already been brought to court and received conviction and been suppressed. The name of the book had been accurately guessed at by someone in the audience, and the lawyer, in confusion, had to admit that such was the case. This brought confusion to the proponents and emphasized the point that was being made against the new bill, which was that the present law was comprehensive enough, supplemented, as it is, by the Federal law, and that inadequacies of prosecution and magistrates' action in New York cannot be continuously corrected by legislative change.

The general argument as developed by Mr. Seligman and Mr. De Ford, speaking in opposition, was that New York State has a broad criminal code on this matter and by court interpretation the words "obscene, lewd, disgusting, indecent, lascivious" had been given an interpretation to mean printed matter or pictures that "excite lecherous and lustful desire." The proponents of the new bill say that, under this, they are not getting the convictions they should before the magistrates, and that the only thing to do to help them out is to make conviction depend on individual phrases, to check appeal to a higher court on anything except legal points, and to eliminate witnesses. The opponents say that to put such extraordinary clauses into a law is contrary to general principles of criminal law and is an extremely dangerous thing to do, and that the power these give may be overused in many directions besides the points being sought. Major Putnam expressed this point when he said that there was in his mind very serious doubt whether enforcers of this law as constituted, would be people who had great breadth of learning and judgment, and that it would be unfortunate for persons without these qualifications to be permitted to take away the property and good name of publishers and booksellers, based only on the passionate judgment of a petit jury. He said that the whole history of censorship thru the ages indicated a continuous failure of power of this kind to work in the directions desired.

Macmillan's Move to Their New Building

A Notable Monument to Publishing Genius and Organizing Ability

MACMILLAN'S new building is now reaching completion. The editorial and business departments have moved and taken the beautiful new offices, and the stock in the stock and shipping rooms will follow rapidly.

To the many visitors that will come to the new quarters this spring the first impression will undoubtedly be that here is a notable monument to publishing genius and organizing ability. On a Fifth Avenue corner with large frontage on two streets, one finds a building of fine proportions, planned by one of the best architects in the country. It is one of the most conspicuous corners in this famous street, as the whole block to the south is occupied by the First Presbyterian Church, which gives the corner a special character and also insures to Macmillan's permanent light.

The entrance thru the great bronze grill is most impressive, and up to the third story runs a beautiful Italian staircase of fine dignity and appropriateness. The visitor will probably pause on the first floor to look in at the bookshop at the right, lined to the ceiling with dark oak shelving and filled with the representative books of this great list. It is finely lighted and supplied with convenient tables for the customer's convenience.

To turn to the left is to come to the principal trade offices of the company, which extend along the southern front and end at the sample room against the west wall. A special passenger elevator gives quick service to the next three floors, tho one can ascend by the easy staircase. On the second floor are the main executive offices, including that of Mr. Brett and the editorial heads of the different departments, including the big educational business. At the far end one steps thru a bronze door into a beautiful directors' room, which, instead of being in the main building, occupies most of the second floor of Mr. Brett's private residence. This room, which has two fireplaces and bookcases, is furnished in the finest walnut and is a room of fine proportions. On this same floor above the retail room is a beautiful library, in which will be on file one each of all the educational publications of the house. This will serve as a visiting place for teachers or a consulting room for authors and publisher. On the third floor are the general business offices, with book-keeping departments and close and rapid connections with all other floors. The whole building is tied together with special automatic house phones by which every desk can be connected with every other in an instant's time.

But if the first impression of the building is that of a monument to publishing genius, perhaps the visiting bookseller will longest remember the impression given of complete equipment for book service. In the old building next door the pressure of business had become such that it was practically impossible to handle it, and architect and staff have now seen to it that the new building meets every possible requirement. All of the upper floors have been carefully systematized to meet the service needs.

The sixth, seventh and eighth floors are big general stockrooms, reached by freight elevators, one large enough to bring up any size binder's truck. The fifth floor has a general stockroom which will carry in systematic arrangement a working supply of every book on the Macmillan list. It is on this floor that the orders will be laid out, and, by careful systematization, the boys can work rapidly thru any order list, no matter how complicated. A dummy elevator leads from this room to the retail store below and to the special pick-up desk on the ground floor, and a quick traveling lift reaches, also, to the bookkeeping department. The stock that will soon fill this great floor is to be entirely new, coming direct from the binderies, so that when the day comes to begin shipping from the new building there will be a complete new stock in readiness.

From this floor go interesting gravity conveyors for the trays of books that have been laid out, and, on the floor below, one sees the trays coming down over the rollers and arranging themselves alongside packing benches; belts carry the baskets up again as soon as they are emptied. On this floor there is perfect arrangement for systematic flow of the small or large packages, and, as they are finally checked off, they are put into a chute that takes them by circular travel down to the shipping room in the back of the ground floor. Here arrangement by routes is made, and, by means of large folding doors, the packages go out onto the platform where there is room for three or four large trucks to drive up under the building. The connection between the order departments, billing, packing and shipping are all worked out with the greatest nicety, and, as with the big new American News Company building, the word "service" seems to have been uppermost in the minds of the architect and staff who planned the details.

Macmillan's now have sixteen trade salesmen on the road, which means that home service must, of necessity, be emphasized, and their selling staff, including educational, medical and other departments, reaches a total of 120. This staff can certainly now feel that the home office is prepared to back up their most energetic selling efforts.

Postal Agreement at Washington

THE conference between the House and the Senate on postal measures has resulted in an agreement which embodies most of the features of the House measure, but gives lower rates to second-class matter as was carried in the Senate bill.

There is considerable disagreement as to how much increased revenue this bill will raise, and President Coolidge has asked the Postmaster General to give him his analysis of the bill. The increase in wages involved would be retroactive to January 1st, and the rate increases on April 15th.

There is provision for a conference committee to study the postal situation further, but no limit placed on the effectiveness of the established rates as was embodied in the Senate measure. Second-class matter would cost but very little, if any more than at present, but there would be a two cent service charge on all parcel post packages, which means an additional cost in handling books, and the special service delivery on parcel post will be 25 cents.

It is presumed that the measure as thus adopted will pass Congress and be up before the President shortly.

New York's Course in Retail Bookselling

B. W. Huebsch and Frederic G. Melcher Give Opening Lectures

ON February nineteenth, seventy-two persons gathered for the course in Retail Bookselling at the College Commerce Building. This course is given by the College of the City of New York in cooperation with the National Association of Book Publishers, whose Executive Secretary, Marion Humble, was on hand for the opening lecture, and the Booksellers' League of New York, its aim being to develop bookselling education. That a college recognizes the importance of bookselling to the extent of fostering a course in that subject is too significant a fact to go unnoticed.

B. W. Huebsch who, with Frederic G. Melcher, is conducting the course, opened with a few remarks on the reason for a course so important in the history of bookselling. There is, Mr. Huebsch explained, what people like to call a New Book Era, which is, in reality, only a restoration, the natural result of the modern transition from an age of industry to one of culture. Popular education and the general expansion of culture is detected not only in literature but in painting, sculpture, in every field and it solely is responsible for the book revival.

The bookseller, Mr. Huebsch pointed out, has an obligation to the public no less than has the lawyer and the physician. A good bookseller should be likened to a thermometer and a barometer, the former being able to tell what is going on in the literary world, what books are on the table and everything happening in the field, the latter being able to tell how the caravan—shall we say Parnassus on Wheels?—is going to swing, what changes are contemplated, in short, in possession of a stock of general information and foresight. Or, again, he is like a tuning fork which gives the public the keynote—its cue. He is, in a sense, responsible for what is read, for readers are open to suggestion. He is not a censor—he is still a merchant—and he is to try first to satisfy his customer's wants. If, however, he can lead his customer to the better book, then so much credit to him. "Try to encourage good books for entertainment to replace magazine fiction" said Mr. Huebsch, for reasons only too evident.

In concluding he gave as a bookseller's qualifications five factors: (1) a certain amount of psychology; (2) selling experience; (3) commercial practice; (4) appre-

"Honest Stationer" (Bookseller)

By GEORGE WITHERS
Poet, 1632

"AN honest Stationer is he, that exercigeth his Mystery (whether it be in printing, bynding, or selling of Bookes) with more respect to the glory of God, and the publike advantage, then to his owne commodity: and is both an ornament, and a profitable member of a civill Commonwealth. . . . If he be a seller of Bookes, he is no meere Bookseller (that is) one who selleth meerely ynck and paper bundled together for his owne advantage only; but he is the Chapman of Arts, of wisdom, and of much experience for a little money. . . .

"In a word, he is such a man that the State ought to cherish him; Schollers to love him; good Customers to frequent his shopp; and the whole Company of Stationers to pray for him: For, it is for the sake of such as he, that they have subsisted, and propered thus long. And thus, you have the true description of such a Stationer as I exempt from my reprofes."

ciation of tradition and (5) an understanding of the product—the physical, as well as the literary. The course, he explained, is not to be a cut and dried affair in which one person does all of the talking but there is to be give and take, the first half of the period devoted to a lecture by some one thoroly competent to speak; the last half devoted to discussion. In short, he said, it's to be a seminar, for knowledge is gained by accretion and we believe this method to be the best towards that end.

Mr. Melcher then took the floor and spoke on the nature of bookselling. "Books," said Mr. Melcher, "are the greatest magic man has ever had." We thought radio a marvel. The very thought of being able to hear, without wires, people hundreds of miles away thrilled us. But how long does it last? Only for the moment, while the person is performing. Thru books, man can pass down in writing his ideas, word for word, so that they may be understood hundreds of years later, not only in his community, but all over the world. It is this last fact, the worldwide appeal of books, which is so vitally important.

"We must," continued Mr. Melcher, "therefore recognize the high trust we have in distributing books—books which are increasing education and culture and developing imagination and genius. We must believe in careful training, taking advantage of every opportunity which presents itself to perfect ourselves as booksellers. We must have a larger than the public conception of our responsibility and realize our obligations to the public." George Withers, the poet, 1632, wrote a description of 'The Honest Stationer' (Bookseller), which we print elsewhere on this page and which the Macmillan Company considered important enough to have placed on a bronze tablet in their new building's entrance-way. "Booksellers," Mr. Melcher stated, "are more important—involve a greater responsibility—than all other retailers." When in doubt as to whether, or not, to continue bookselling, Mr. Melcher has passed down a street devoted to shops, and stopped before each one and after inspecting it, asked himself, "Is bookselling more important than this?" and each time he got "Yes!" for an answer.

For there is no other profession—and bookselling, in its proper sense, is a profession—which holds so much of the common welfare in its power, no other profession which receives so much assistance from the community. There are the schools, where 8,000 teachers are advertising books, the churches, the libraries, the organizations such as the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Boy and Girl Scouts and numberless others, and, lastly, the various clubs. All are pushing books and interesting their followers in reading. The rest is the bookseller's duty. He is responsible for understanding his community, for seeing that only the right news and opinions about books and literary happenings appear in the newspapers, and for serving his customers so that they get the habit of buying. "For," added Mr. Melcher, "the people who pay the rent on a bookstore are those who get the habit." Serving your customers does not mean bothering them. "A good clerk," he said, "is alert, but not pressing." He should be on the job to send books where he knows they should go.

Mr. Melcher, like Mr. Huebsch, concluded with the qualifications of a bookseller, the most important of which he said was interest enough to come to such a course. There are three absolute necessities, he said, the first of which is responsiveness. Morley said books are dynamite. Don't be afraid to let it go off. Become explosive, foolishly enthusiastic, but let it be genuine. Recite poetry for your customers—Mr. Melcher did—convince them that you're convinced that books are "the greatest magic." Enthusiasm is contagious, and the customer will "catch it," but remember the larger the shop the more enthusiasm necessary, for the greater number of persons it has to pass thru. The second is patience, patience in every form, with everything, with details especially, and with people. And last, executive ability. Exert the courage of your convictions. And as a farewell firecracker, Mr. Melcher added, "especially do women need executive ability, the good honest kind, for they seem to be afraid of their subordinates."

The second lecture in the course, to be given February twenty-sixth, will be on the historical background of bookselling and the evolution of the modern bookshop.

Ladies' Night at the Booksellers' League

Burkhardt Throws the Lariat

THE Booksellers' League celebrated its thirtieth anniversary, as well as its annual ladies' night, at the Hotel Brevoort on February 18th. A rattling good program produced a perfectly enjoyable evening. Frank Bohm, feature writer for the New York Times, delivered an eloquent lecture on Mexico and the Mexicans. His appeal for fair-play for our next-door neighbors and a proper realization of the importance of shielding that country from foreign exploitation, won prolonged applause. Marguerite Wilkinson, author of "New Voices" (Macmillan), read several selections from her own poems, and John Mulholland, author of "Magic in the Making" performed a number of conjuring tricks to the astonishment and delight of all.

The sensation of the evening, however, came when the founder of the League, the shy Charles A. Burkhardt, was called upon to say something in commemoration of the anniversary. A suspicion was rife that his message would be more or less an historical review, and some of his old friends settled down for a quiet nap. Instead he was the rival of Irvin Cobb, at a booksellers' annual convention, or the famous lariat-thrower, Will Rogers, at a publishers' annual luncheon. Here is what he said:

"When I told your President I intended to give you the history of the thirty years of the League in thirty minutes, he said, 'have a heart, cut it to thirty seconds, we prefer to sleep at home.' He differs from me in that when I want a good sleep I go to church. It is so restful. I hate, however, to have the collection plate pushed into my ribs; one is apt to say something when awakened suddenly.

"This is the second dinner I have attended in three years and the second Ladies' night in thirty years. I cannot tell you how much I regret missing the other twenty-eight, but there was always some excuse. I am never at a loss for an excuse and have never bribed our secretary to send me notices of fake meetings of the Board to my home as the others do. There is no art in this. Mine are all original and I never use the same one twice. Besides my wife trusts me.

"Three years ago I read 'Speaking of Operations.' I was greatly interested and decided to have an operation of my own in order to have an excuse for Ladies' Night that year which happened on my birthday. This I celebrated in bed. It was the one year I would have enjoyed Ladies' Night and discarded the excuse. I do not know why I took Irvin Cobb seriously; he does not know how to be serious.

"Fame has touched some of our members. There is the Hon. David J. O'Connell who was sent to Congress; some others have been sent to jail; tho I can qualify for both I have not yet been sent to either. Dave got his honors thru misrepresentation; he promised before election to put an end to Volstead, but we are still paying six dollars for something not worth more than one dollar.

"Thirty years ago Lacy, Holden and I were young and handsome. You would hardly believe it to look at us now. Holden in those days sold tracts for a man named Thomas Whitaker in the Bible House, but Comstock got wise and closed the place giving Holden a life sentence with hard labor in the office of the Publishers' Weekly.

"Thirty years ago Charles Shoemaker was one of the 'Hundred Choice Selections' of the Penn Publishing Company in a Kindergarten at Philadelphia, he now is Press Agent or President of the Company. As a Politician he has no equal, having twice elected himself President of the League.

"Credit is due P. T. Barnum in having discovered Mr. Sherwood while searching for curiosities for his museum. He widely advertised Mr. Sherwood as the only book worm in captivity and drew large crowds and the police to Fulton Street long after Mr. Barnum's death.

"The American Baptist Society discovered Mr. Schulte about the same time and made him Commodore of its Navy with Station and Stationery in New York. He now guards the Treasury of the League. He is a fine fellow and Houdini could not extract a dollar from him that was not owed by the League.

"Dodd, Mead & Co. deserve highly the thanks of the League in having discovered a real gem or pearl, not however in an oyster, but in Frederick D. Lacy who has introduced to the League many lions and sometimes even snakes. He now operates an electric heater in back of his desk at Putnam's.

"Mr. McKeachie is a shining example of the opportunities of American youth to attain the highest honors. Thirty years ago he was a boy on a farm and later became President—of the League. Like Lincoln he was very fond of books and the pennies given him by his mother for Sunday School were used to purchase books, Beadle's dime novels, Nick Carter, the complete works of Laura Jean Libbey and many others.

"This history would not be complete without some mention of myself, but the less I have to say about myself the better for me; there may be plain clothes men among you. All booksellers, however, wear plain clothes, their salary permits no others, but you know the kind I mean.

"Good after dinner speakers like myself always talk in circles or bunches and I may not have given all the events in the order in which they occurred so I will ask our worthy Secretary, Mr. McKeachie, to read you all the minutes of the past thirty years, should he have them with him.

"Now, Mr. President, I move you a vote of thanks to the present speaker who has so ably given us an uncensored history of the League from its inception to the present time."

Philadelphians Enjoy Magic and Good Talk

"SCRIBNER NIGHT" as presented by representatives of that publishing house to the Booksellers' Association of Philadelphia on February 19th at the Franklin Inn Club proved to be one of the most interesting evenings in the history of the association. The principal speaker of the evening was John Mulholland, author of "Magic in the Making" and a conjurer of sorts. Mr. Mulholland performed a number of mystifying tricks and then proceeded to show the booksellers how they had been completely taken in and how easy it was to "make magic" provided one had a little confidence, a few home-made accessories and a good line of magician's "patter."

Copies of Mulholland's book were distributed to the audience thru the courtesy of the Scribners. Maxwell Perkins of the editorial department of Charles Scribners Sons spoke on the trials and tribulations of the editor; Walter Gilkyson, author of "Oil" talked on the novel of the present day, terming the currently popular sensational novel "spinal column" fiction and predicting its early replacement by something which would have more right to existence.

Walter Gibson of the Public Ledger explained the mechanics of constructing cross word puzzles and told of the verbal difficulties in which the cross word puzzle engineer constantly finds himself. Whitnew Darrow, sales manager of Scribners, also spoke. Walter K. Taylor, president of the Booksellers' Association of Philadelphia presided and introduced the speakers and announced that the next meeting would be the regular "Ladies' Night" of the Association to be held in the Bellevue Stratford Hotel on March 19th.

Don't Forget The Cross Word Puzzle Contest

THE three puzzles appeared in the February 7, February 14 and February 21 issues of the Publishers' Weekly. The Copyright Proposal in Canada

Authors Suggest Improvements and Elimination of Licenses

THE Canadian copyright legislation was revised by an act of 1921, which, with amendments, went into effect January 1st, 1924, but at that time the authors expressed the opinion that the bill needed revision to be an adequate and equitable code. Their proposed revisions are now embodied in a bill introduced by Mr. Chevrier into the House of Commons, Bill Number 2, "An Act to Amend and Make Operative Certain Provisions of the Copyright Act of 1921." The bill had its first reading February 11th.

The most important feature, from the point of view of American book publishing, would be the elimination of the provisions for compulsory licenses, which affected only the authors of Canada and the United States. In eliminating these, the sponsors for this bill state:

"No such invasion of the essential nature of copyright has ever existed in Canada or in any civilized country, and the putting into effect of these sections deprives the authors of much of their natural rights and robs their property of a great part of its value. These license clauses have been forced into the Canadian Act under the pretense of helping the several classes of artisans engaged in the printing and publishing business in Canada. In fact, and inasmuch as these clauses authorize the reprinting in Canada with plates made in the United States, they are advantageous to but a few printers and help exploit a Canadian author, thru a compulsory method which has been condemned by the Publishers' Committee of the Toronto Board of Trade. In order to escape the evil of these license clauses, Canadian authors are now compelled to print two editions of their work, when one single edition should be sufficient."

Another change affects Section 2 and following of the old act, where the proceedings against infringement were made difficult or impossible. In Section 2, the definition of "literary work" has been broadened and includes unpublished and published compositions in any material method or form whatsoever. Section 2 is also revised to include broadcasting and other kindred means of using copyright material.

Section 10 is revised to include a paragraph that puts restrictions over the use of works in the public domain, specifying that, as this is now national property, it should be used properly and not abused, and that the work and name of the author shall be accurately reproduced, etc.

In Section 16, the question of what can constitute public performance of a work has led to the use of the phrase, "In consideration of an admission fee" instead of "for private profit." This broadens the protection.

The difficult problem of musical records and rolls is met by adopting the English system of a royalty percentage instead of a fixed fee as in the United States and also as in the present law in Canada. This fee is fixed at 2½% of the retail selling price for the first two years after the act goes into effect, and 5% thereafter. The English rate is 5%.

In the sections on infringement, persons conducting non-profit-making enterprises are put on the same basis as those conducting profitable enterprises, and the minimum fee for infringement is fixed on a basis that affords the complainant some compensation for the trouble and risk involved in bringing a successful complaint. It is also provided that the burden of proof of right to print rests on the person charged with such an offense. The author's representative is also given legal power to guard against infringement as well as the author himself. Section 27, the importing clause, prohibits the importation under the Customs tariff of books "where the owner of the copyright has, by license or otherwise, granted the right to reproduce any book in Canada," except that individuals can import more than two copies and libraries any number that they want.

As Copyright Stands

COPYRIGHT legislation, as expected by all but the most sanguine, must wait action by the Sixty-ninth Congress, but substantial advance has been made thru the hearings carefully and patiently held by the House Patents Committee.

The Solberg or Perkins bill has properly held the centre of the stage at these hearings and has been discussed from all sides, so that the way is open for intelligent action at the coming sessions. This bill has rightly the strong position, as it is cordially and enthusiastically supported by authors of all classes, represented thru the Authors' League of America and cognate organizations.

It is approved also by publishers and librarians, with reservations which present opposing views chiefly on Section 41, for which publishers have proposed a substitute, including concessions to the librarians on all points save one, the normal acknowledgment of the right of the foreign author, thru his American publisher, to safeguard the American market. The chairman of the American Library Association committee excepts not only to the publishers' substitute, but to the provision in the Solberg bill specifically assuring to the author the right to sell for a specified territory, on which the substitute is based. This provision is new in copyright law only in that it is specifically assured in the text of the law and is indeed one of the general rights in property, especially in patent property, and on this point publishers are defending authors' rights, and neither they nor the authors can accept the opposing view.

The printing Unions entered protest against the Solberg measure because, without consultation with them on the part of the Authors' League, the manufacturing requirement had been altogether omitted from the bill. Copyright development has now outgrown the manufacturing clause of 1891 and 1909, which made impossible entrance into the International Copyright Union. Section 41 in the substitute form, while preserving the absolute rights of the foreign author, invites American manufacture by safeguarding the American market and enabling the American publisher to promote the fullest success of the foreign book in that market, and this feature, if accepted for the Solberg measure, may prove a compromise acceptable to the printing interests.

The motion picture interests are entirely sympathetic with the authors in their support of authors' rights, but their counsel takes exception to several features of the Solberg bill. It is not intended, we understand, to reintroduce in its present form the Dallinger bill, which has not been pressed at the recent hearings, and it is to be hoped that the Solberg measure may be amended, where these criticisms prove justified, and that the motion picture interests may join cordially with the authors before the coming Congress in support of a modified Solberg bill. The bill might, in fact be the better for following the precedent of other copyright measures, as does the Dallinger bill, in bringing to the front the nature of copyright in the early sections. It is to be regretted that the counsel for the motion picture interests saw fit at the last hearing to attack the book publishers mostly on questions which were mistakenly understood.

There is definite and uncompromising opposition, not only to the Solberg and Dallinger measures, but to our entrance into the International Copyright Union, from two interests, which are really one—the phonograph and player piano manufacturers and the managers of motion picture theaters, who wish to use music without due compensation to the author, under the present arrangement with the Society of Musical Composers. These interests are on the wrong side of the fence in opposing copyright development on the lines of the Solberg measure and will be fighting a losing cause. The fixed royalty scheme of two cents per copy embodied in earlier legislation was a makeshift, which is no longer justifiable, and the Solberg measure safeguards the Victor and other mechanical music manufacturers by providing that what they have legally done shall not become illegal. More than this they cannot rightly ask, nor is it likely that Congress will go farther.

The prospect is bright for action in the Sixty-ninth Congress, which will not only enable us to enter the International Copyright Union, but will place us foremost, instead of hindermost, in copyright development. When this comes about, too much credit cannot be given to Thorvald Solberg, Register of Copyrights, who, from his fifty years' experience, has given to the Authors' League the full benefit of his ripe knowledge in the preparation of the pending measure.

Publishers' Situation Under the Perkins Bill

AT the hearing on February 3rd before the Patents Committee in Washington, D. Appleton & Company were represented by Attorneys Baker, Selby and Rutter, who presented a brief, outlining the publishers' situation as it would develop under the provisions of the Perkins Copyright Bill. In brief, this statement read:

"There is a certain provision of the bill, which, if enacted, will practically eliminate the American publisher from the very legitimate field of publishing the works of foreign authors. It need scarcely be called to the attention of this Committee that, if it is impossible, for an American publisher to protect himself under an absolute assignment of American rights by a foreign author, he will be greatly discouraged, if not completely prevented from making arrangements for printing and publishing these foreign works in America.

"As the bill is now drafted, no protection is given the American publisher, and he is not given any power to enforce the exclusive right that he may have obtained to the American territory. It is left open for foreign publishers to flood the American market with the works to which the American publisher has acquired exclusive rights. The American reader would thus be deprived of the opportunity of purchasing American editions which would be published in accordance with his desires and habits, and, what is still more important, the broad American circulation of the works of foreign authors would be greatly curtailed, as the American publisher, thru his national advertising and salesmanship, is in a better position to promote larger circulation provided he is given the incentive and reward of the just fruits of his endeavors, unembarrassed by foreign publishers.

"We wish to impress upon the Committee that it is our opinion that this serious danger cannot, from a practical standpoint, be adequately taken care of by tariff legislation. Furthermore, the rights which we wish to protect are not rights dependent on economic conditions, but rights much more absolute and meritorious.

"The proposed amendment to Section 41 simply guards against the wholesale importation on a commercial basis of foreign books for which an American publisher has the exclusive right in America, and the section protects him only during the period in which an edition of American manufacture is published and kept on sale. The Committee's attention is directed to the fact that Section 41 is not only offensive to sound principles of copyright, but to sound economics, and is also repugnant to the very spirit of the International Copyright Union. The purpose of the International Copyright Union is to guarantee to foreign authors the same protection in regard to their works which citizens of the United States possess. It is therefore repugnant to the very spirit of this agreement if the foreign author is subjected to a discrimination which in effect makes it impossible for him to give a valid assignment. When the Committee's attention is directed to this breach of comity, which is threatened by the enactment of Section 41 as now worded, we feel that it will give serious attention to the proposed substitute which the National Association of Book Publishers proposes."

The Fourth Hearing on Copyright Bill

The Motion Picture Interests Are Heard

(Reported Expressly for The Publishers' Weekly by Waldon Fawcett.)

THE motives of book publishers in supporting the Perkins Bill were impugned at the fourth hearing on this measure conducted by the House Committee on February 24, and the Committee was told that periodical publishers and newspapers are opposed to the pending bill, which it is proposed to reintroduce in the same form in the next Congress. Finally, the forces of organized labor in the printing trades were pictured as antagonistic to the Perkins Bill,

That so much discussion and criticism of the position of book publishers should have been precipitated on a day set aside for the arguments of the spokesmen of the motion picture industry was due to the appearance of Arthur W. Weil in a dual rôle. The principal witness of the day, this lawyer appeared primarily for the Motion Picture Producers and Exhibitors of America. But, incidentally, he showed credentials as representative of the National Publishers' Association (periodicals). In the latter capacity he became involved in the discussion in the course of which he paid his respects to the book publishers. Members of the Committee were keen in cross-examination on this aspect. Indeed, the Committeemen asked more questions of the witnesses than at any previous session.

"Book publishers want a free bill of health to print wherever is cheapest" argued Mr. Weil in purported explanation of why the book publishers alone, of producing interests and users of copyright material, spoke well of the Perkins Bill. He read a lengthy statement signed by Frederick W. Hume, Executive Secretary of the National Publishers' Association, and added that the only reason that the newspapers were not similarly represented in emphatic opposition was that the newspaper publishers understood that, owing to the state of the Congressional calendar at the close of this short session, there was no possibility that the Perkins Bill would be taken up in the House and that it would be an idle formality to present, at this time, opposition which might be more effective at a later date.

Representative Bloom observed that if periodical and newspaper publishers were unanimously opposed to the Perkins Bill, as represented at this late date, he thought it strange that neither he nor his colleagues had received so much as a single letter from a publisher criticizing the bill.

"Book publishers have appeared in favor of the Perkins Bill because they could print outside the United States. Magazine publishers who will continue to publish in the United States are opposed to it" was one of the comments of the witness, heralded as "the greatest authority on copyright," in the course of his effort to paint the Perkins Bill as an attempt to create class distinction. "Nobody" he said, in denunciation of the newspaper stipulation in the Perkins Bill "knows what a 'general copyright' is." He predicted, too, all manner of troubles for the newspapers because, under the bill they are given the right to print and publish but not the right to vend their publications of copyright material.

Chief inspiration for the opposition of the periodical publishers and the reputed antagonism of newspaper publishers was dissatisfaction with the "notice" provisions of the bill. It was set forth that not only would this cause embarrassment with respect to the literary matter in newspapers and magazines but that even worse things might happen with respect to advertisements. As the story was told, publishers could not possibly investigate in each instance to determine whether advertising copy offered for insertion was an infringement of copyright. Even advertising agencies might be caught in this way. Yet if a publisher were incautious enough to print advertising matter (other than photographs) which transgressed an existing copyright, he would automatically become subject to a penalty of from $200 to $5000. Mr. Weil reared a bogey of imaginary organizations which would have as their object the mulcting of publishers by collecting forfeits for unwitting publication of copyrighted advertising copy.

Most of Mr. Weil's slaps at the book publishing interests were given incident to the charge that the Perkins Bill would remove the existing protection to American labor contained in the law of 1909. Incident to this part of the discussion, in which various members of the committee participated, Mr. Weil related at some length the history of the conferences which resulted in the drafting of the Dallinger Bill. He praised the labor organizations as having taken a very broad view of the situation in their stand that they did not wish to compel foreign authors to print in the United States if the printing trades were assured that they would hold the American market.

Labor was declared by Mr. Weil to be "exceedingly suspicious" of the Perkins Bill as throwing over the result of negotiations extending over many months. As a result of questions put by members of the committee, it was brought out that whereas the Authors' League of America was represented in the conferences which brought forth the Dallinger Bill, there had been no participation by the mechanical musical interests nor by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Mr. Weil evaded the question whether the Dallinger draft would still be acceptable to the interests he represented. He declared that since one party to the compromise had drawn out, his principals would reserve the right to reconsider their acceptance of certain concessions made in the interest of harmony. As to the Authors' League, he thought that this organization had been misled. The authors are getting, in the opinion of Mr. Weil, a bill that is "glittering" but is much less favorable to them than the Dallinger version.

There was lively discussion during the fourth hearing of the amendments proposed by Nathan Burkan, representing the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the Authors' League. It was indicated that the periodical publishers and newspaper publishers are unalterably opposed to the presence in the copyright statutes of any provision whereby copyright reverts to an author immediately after periodical publication has been made. It was argued that under this provision for the recovery of serial rights it would be possible for an author to sell the right of reproduction to a competing publication immediately upon the appearance of the first edition of the periodical which had originally contracted for publication.

A. L. Hess appeared on behalf of the motion picture producers to correct what he declared was a misconception regarding the treatment accorded authors by the motion picture interests. He had figures covering the royalty payments during the past five years of five companies out of the total of 75 motion picture producers in the United States. The statistics showed, on the part of the five companies, aggregate royalty payments during the five years of $11,112,921. This, said the witness, was an average of $11,834 per picture. He declared that some authors had been paid as high as $150,000 for the motion picture rights of a single work and that today no author of note and reputation receives, for an established success, less than $15,000 to $20,000. This goes, he added, direct to the authors, inasmuch as only in rare instances does the book or periodical publisher control the motion picture rights.

Summarized, the attitude of the motion picture producers, as conveyed at this final hearing of the session, was that if "proper safeguards" can be provided they are in favor of the United States entering the Berne Convention. They criticize the Perkins Bill, however, as "clearly discriminating" against the motion picture producers. One of the safeguards that the motion picture people demand as the price of their cooperation is "notice." They assert that they do not want to be put in the position of infringers and do not want to be compelled constantly to go to the courts for interpretations of the law. One of the spokesmen for the motion picture interests remarked in this connection that it has required sixteen years for the clarifying of the present law, with some sections still cloudy, and that inasmuch as the Perkins Bill is "twenty times worse than the Act of 1909" it will take fifty years of litigation to clear its ambiguous phrases.

The second demand of the motion picture producers was for a copyright statute so fashioned that when they pay for copyright they will have a clear title. Thirdly, they insist upon provisions that will enable them to take an instrument of copyright sale where it will be properly recorded. Altho Mr. Weil declared, when asked by the Committee to suggest amendments, that the Perkins Bill was so bad that he would not even propose amendments, the motion picture delegates went on record as favoring new copyright legislation.

Esther Hunt, appearing for the artists (other than the illustrators), the art dealers and art publishers heartily endorsed the bill in its present form. Mrs. Nevin, owner of the copyrights on "The Rosary," "Narcissus," etc., corrected the wrong impressions conveyed by testimony of a representative of the Victor Talking Machine Company as to the royalty payments made to her.

The impression given at the conclusion of the hearing was that the Perkins Bill will be reintroduced in its present form in the new or 69th Congress which is due to meet in December next if not summoned in special or extra session in the autumn. Inasmuch as the new Congress brings only two changes in the personnel of the House Patent Committee, with no change in the Chairmanship, it is hoped that the bill can be disposed of in committee without the necessity of covering the old ground by additional hearings.

Boston Book Publishers Join Forces

THE Atlantic Monthly Press, Inc.—the book-publishing department of the Atlantic Monthly Company—and Little, Brown & Company, the oldest book-publishing firm in Boston, have entered into an association for the promotion of common interests.

All books hitherto issued by the Atlantic Monthly Press will be published in the future by Little, Brown & Company, under a distinctive trade mark, as "Atlantic Monthly Press Publications." This term will also apply to future books, on which the two firms shall agree as representing in general the type of publication now identified with the Atlantic Monthly Press. All such books, many of which have borne or will bear a direct relation with the Atlantic Monthly, will be prepared for publication, editorially and in format, at the Atlantic offices. The processes of manufacture and distribution, will be handled by Little, Brown & Company.

The advantages to the reading public, to the houses concerned, and to the authors associated with them, are notable. Little, Brown & Company, with a book list of great vitality and a highly efficient trade organization, have hitherto lacked magazine affiliations, with all that is implied in contacts with authors new and old.

The Atlantic Monthly Company has always been primarily devoted to the publishing of magazines, and the growth of its periodicals, The Atlantic Monthly, The House Beautiful and the Living Age, thru late years has been so marked as to make it desirable to spend still more time and energy in their intensive development. It will, however, retain its active interest in the books heretofore published by the Atlantic Monthly Press and those to come from its varied associations with authors.

The long experience and established reputation of Little, Brown & Company, will insure for all "Atlantic Monthly Press Publications" prestige among book buyers.

The arrangement, now consummated, will go into effect at once. The existing Atlantic Monthly Press books, including those planned for spring publication, will be distributed henceforth by Little, Brown & Company.

Beginning with the Autumn of 1925, each new book issued under the cooperative plan will be designated an "Atlantic Monthly Press Publication" and published by Little, Brown & Company. The retail book room of each firm will be continued.

To the common enterprise there will be a joint contribution of personal energies thru the business and editorial experiences of Messrs. Ellery Sedgwick, Alfred R. McIntyre, MacGregor Jenkins, Herbert F. Jenkins, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, and others.

Old and Rare Books

Edited by Frederick M. Hopkins

OFFICIALS of Wagner College, Staten Island, are studying an extensive collection of early newspapers, mainly prior to the Revolution, pamphlets and manuscripts recently discovered in the archives of the college. Among these papers is Franklin's Pennsylvania Gazette, and many manuscripts, including an important speech delivered by Frederick Muhlenberg, speaker of the National House of Representatives.

THE two hundredth anniversary of Washington's birth, seven years hence in 1932, will be fittingly commemorated, probably not only by our own country, but by the entire world. In the intervening years, Washington's life and his services and their significance will receive a great deal of attention. Washingtoniana of every description will be much sought after. Autographic material especially will be in demand and prices are sure to make great advances.

PART VII of the collection of the late William F. Gable of Altoona, Penn., will be sold at the American Art Galleries March 4th. It will comprise American and English first editions, manuscripts and autographs of famous authors, distinguished statesmen, presidents of the United States, signers of the Declaration of Independence, and other celebrities. This part contains 1,117 lots a large part of which is of special interest to discriminating collectors.

THE Hungarian National Museum has succeeded in purchasing the oldest known book written in the Hungarian language, known as the Codex Ehrenfelt, now in London. It was to have been sold under the hammer by the family of Dr. Ehrenfelt of Vienna at Sotheby's February 24, with the reserve price of £1,000. The book dates from 1430. The story is told that its former owner, Dr. Adolf Ehrenfelt, a Vienna lawyer, came into possession of the book in a most unusual manner. In 1851 he was a student at Nyitra, Northern Hungary. One day while wrestling with a companion this book was hurled at him and he pocketed it. It was only in later years that he became aware of its historic value and importance.

THERE is a fairly well authenticated story that Abraham Lincoln while he was still a young lawyer unknown to any but local fame, once made a remarkable speech which had the effect of holding together the newly formed Republican party at the time when it was on the point of disintegrating. This speech was not recorded in any way, but parts of it lived in the memory of those who heard it, altho the speech in its entirety is irretrievably lost. Honoré Willis Morrow has taken this speech and the events that called it forth and used them as the background of a story that will be published by Frederick A. Stokes Company next month, under the title, "The Lost Speech of Abraham Lincoln."

AMERICANA, comprising books and autographs, and including works on California and the West, the North American Indians, early almanacs, railroads, maps, scarce broadsides, and historical chintz panels, together with the notable Revolutionary War collection of Arthur P. Howard, with additions, will be sold at the American Art Galleries March 5th. The rarer lots include signed autograph letters of the greatest interest and importance by Captain Nathan Hale, Patrick Henry, Greene, Marion, Laurens, Hamilton, Philip Schuyler, Wayne, Commodore Isaac Hull, Stephen Decatur, and other outstanding figures of the Revolution and the War of 1812, as well as desirable letters of later heroes of the Civil War.

THE library of the late Frederick K. Trowbridge, banker and well-known member of the Grolier Club, has been purchased by the Rosenbach Company of this city. The estimated purchase price has been placed at upwards of a quarter million dollars. The collection is an extensive one, comprising more than 3,000 volumes mostly rare books in collector's condition. The rarer lots include such items as a First Folio of Shakespeare; notable series of first editions of Kipling and Lamb; a ten page letter written by General Washington to Benjamin Harrison, signer of the Declaration of Independence; the manuscript of Thackeray's "Chalk Mark on the Door"; Scott's "Parting Address," written for Mrs. Siddons at her request; autograph letters of Edgar Allan Poe; a love letter of John Keats to Fanny Brawne. There are also many first editions of well-known English authors of the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, including Fielding, Smollett, Sterne, Lever, Ainsworth and Cooper.

"THE BOOKPLATE ANNUAL FOR 1925" is nearing completion. The subject matter consists of a critical appreciation of the fanciful bookplates of Dugald Stewart Walker by Gardner Teall, which will be illustrated by two original copper-plate impressions of unusual interest. "The Bookplates of D. Y. Cameron," which means much to every one interested in art, is contributed by Haldane Macfall; and Walter Shaw Sparrow writes about the famous bookplates designed by Robert Anning Bell, A.R.A. "The George Washington Bookplate Myth" by Charles O. Cornelius, of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, will be an interesting revelation to all bookplate enthusiasts. This new "Bookplate Annual" will also present a portfolio of contemporary bookplates, a new exchange list of bookplate collectors, and an illustrated account of the Tenth Annual Exhibition of Contemporary Bookplates. It will be a large quarto, printed in large type, double column, on Old Stratford paper, bound in blue boards and limited to 500 copies. Booklovers will find this volume, like its predecessors, well worth owning. It is indispensable to bookplate collectors.

LOST for 370 years and hunted for more than three centuries, the "missing link" in the complete manual of architecture which Sebastiano Serlio planned to give to the world in the sixteenth century has been discovered at Columbia University. Buried in an unpublished manuscript recently acquired by the university's School of Architecture, it was discovered by Professor William B. Dinsmoor, the librarian. In announcing the discovery Professor Dinsmoor declared the Serlio manuscript of great architectural and bibliographical interest and importance, destined to cause a revision of modern judgment of the French Renaissance. "Internal evidence, such as the analysis of the nine kinds of paper used for the text and drawings," said Professor Dinsmoor, explaining the revelations, "revealed that the work had been executed between 1541 and 1551. It was in this last year that one drawing was added as an afterthought, and other later drawings are on paper which can be dated as of 1545 and 1547. The bulk of the work was done on paper purchased in Lyons, thru which Serlio passed in 1541, proving that it was composed during the first four years of his residence in France.

THE famous Charles Woodbury McLellan collection of Lincolniana presented to the John Hay Library at Brown University a little over a year ago by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has at last been placed in its permanent arrangement. The possibility has passed that this great collection might be broken up. It contains more than 7,000 items of autograph letters, documents, books, pamphlets, broadsides, music, engraving, badges, medals, and portraits. There are about 130 Lincoln autograph letters and documents, and about 180 more autograph letters relating to Lincoln's career. Mr. McLellan was one of five leading collectors of Lincolniana. Sometime sacrifices of personal gain and triumph were necessary in order that the efforts of all might have a fair show and progress evenly. The five are said to have frequently compared notes and divided up the possibilities at successive auctions. The first famous Lincoln collector was Andrew Boyd of Troy, N. Y. He began collecting in Lincoln's own day. In time the Boyd collection passed to William H. Lambert of Philadelphia and became the nucleus of a remarkable assemblage. The almost equally fine Judd Stewart collection is now a part of the Huntington Library. Other Lincoln collections are those of Oliver Barrett of Chicago, and that of Joseph B. Oakleaf of Moline, Ill. The earliest item in the McLellan collection is the certificate of entry of 400 acres of land in Kentucky in 1780 by Abram Linkhorn, grandfather of the president. Twenty-five documents and letters, including records of three legal partnerships, cover his legal career. The earliest is dated 1838 and is signed also by Stephen A. Douglas. There is a fine political letter that mentions Zachary Taylor as "Old Zach." A special room has been selected for the collection and great care has been given to a dignified and artistic setting.

MAMMONART

By Upton Sinclair

A study of the world's culture from an entirely new point of view.

Who made the "classics," and why?

Do the world's great writers and artists serve the people? Or do they serve and glorify the ruling classes?

The most revolutionary criticism of literature and the arts ever penned; at once a history of culture and a battle-cry.

George Sterling writes: "You may not know everything, son, but you can sure turn out interesting stuff!"

400 pages, cloth, $2, paper-bound $1, postpaid.

THINGS I SHOULDN'T TELL

This is unquestionably the big hit of the Spring Season. It is selling better than "UNCENSORED RECOLLECTIONS" by the same author, which was the international sensation of 1924. It contains an inexhaustible fund of stories by the greatest raconteur of the day. "Amusing glimpses of the great and near-great,"—writes Amy Loveman in the Saturday Review. No book of the Spring Season has received so much attention at the hands of reviewers. Backed by an extensive advertising campaign it is the important book which you can sell with little effort and a nice profit at $4.50

THE SIGN OF EVIL By ANTHONY WYNNE

This remarkable story has the same quality of foreboding and horror which overshadows the tales of Poe, Gaboriau and Doyle. There is a sinister touch to the crime committed which one does not easily forget. In forging mental links and searching into the minds of men for motives, Dr. Hailey, the doctor detective, has few equals. We predict that this book will be one of the season's topnotchers. Publication date March 7th. $2.00

ANYTHING BUT THE TRUTH

By CAROLYN WELLS

This new "Fleming Stone" detective story is the best ever written by Carolyn Wells who has a large following. It will win for her many new readers. If you think that a detective tale cannot offer an original plot read this one in which Stone takes justice into his own hands. $2.00
